THURSDAY EVENING, JANUARY 26

A NEW INFERNAL MACHINE -Samuel Has brock, a colored mac, was a porter in the Sher dan House, a large wooden building in Main street, Elizabeth, N. J., adjaining the Union county court hous: Recently he was spoken to sherpy by Col. Mills, the proprietor, for some fault, and he retorted sourly. When the altere alon classed each was in a very uppleasant homor. Hasbrook want on with the discharge of his ou has sad in the eventog, as u-ual, he pisc d a sout le of coal behind the sitting room stove. Shorely bef re midnight Col. Mil silfied the cost had to the stave door, when the glitter of something among the coals suracted his attention. He passed the coals back from it, and diec wered that the thing that had stracted his attention was the top of a kerosene oil cin. It had been famened to the bottom of the coal hod so that i would not be thrown out with the coal. In the can was pint and a ball of ker. sece oil. The cap of the can had been unser: wed and taken off, and the cap of the spout also had been removed so that the oil would run out freely. The spour was pointed toward the mound of the coal hed. Bar for Col. Mills' aced upon the bid of live cost to the steve, with what result can only be conjectured. Many guests w reasleep at this time to the hotel, so that if the oil had taken fire, with an explosion, other lives besides that of Col. Mills would have been entangered.
